

Why is homeopathy good for teeth?

We have incredibly sick nations, dental decay is ramped, our modern diet is detrimental to our oral health. Strong correlations have been made in cardiovascular and dental disease. Although, biological holistic dentistry understands well that the mouth is connected to all systems of the body and a reflection of overall health, there is still a gap in addressing the complete susceptibility in one's system to dental problems.

Holistic dentistry proclaims that every time you brush your teeth and floss, bacteria is filtered and transported throughout the body almost immediately. My goal in supporting clients with homeopathy is to reduce their susceptibility to bacteria, support the oral systemic connection by strengthening leaky tissue, ultimately establishing a healthier terrain.

Poor dental health can lead to overall increase inflammation, cascading into a variety of health concerns. Conventional dental treatments are not proven safe or non-toxic and can have effects in pregnancy and young children, as well as adults. Homeopathy may address deep underlying causes, support detoxification pathways, and trigger the body into a healing response.
